THE RELATIONSHIP

One and One Make Three

FOR GREATER UNDERSTANDING BE SURE TO READ THIS SHORT INTRODUCTION

This Successful Relationship report tells you how when two individuals have been involved with one another long enough or intensely enough for it to be called a relationship, then it is as if these two people have created a third entity: the relationship itself. A good way of understanding this is to see a relationship, this third entity, as a child that the couple have produced. As such it will have a strong effect upon both people, individually and as a partnership. In fact, in the same way that an actual child makes the two people that created it into parents, the relationship makes them into partners, rather than just two separate individuals. That 'child' will also change its 'parents' as people. So knowing and understanding this 'child' that you have together created goes a long way towards making it a happy and successful relationship. And again just as with children, fascinatingly there will sometimes be seen 'character traits' in the relationship which are similar to what one or both of you possess as individuals. These are most easily identified by having a Home*Star Concise Personality Profile for each of you.

Your Relationship Profile can also be used as a kind of prospectus for a relationship that is not that established or has not even begun. The Profile would then show you what it would be like if and when you did become more involved as the relationship unfolded and developed over time. In this respect your Relationship Profile could be said to be predictive.

How Your Relationship Chart is Calculated

Your Relationship Chart is shown on the previous page, followed by the chart data. Your individual birth details are given at the very end of this Profile on the Postscript page; please check that these are correct as given. Astrologically, your Relationship Chart is calculated by taking the midpoint in time and the midpoint in space between your birth times and birth places, respectively. Your relationship's 'birth date' is given in the chart data, on the far left. You can celebrate this as your 'relationship birthday' if you wish. Its 'birthplace' is also given here, but as map coordinates as this midpoint is not necessarily going to fall in a particular town. It could be a point in the ocean or mountains, but it can be interesting to know this place, and if possible, visit it as a couple. Of course, if you were both born in the same town, then that is where the relationship will have been 'born' too.

Whilst Reading Your Relationship Profile

Please bear in mind that although this Relationship Chart interpretation is as accurate and informative as possible, there is no guarantee that every word will apply at this moment in time, or in the past or future. This Chart maps out your potential as a couple, and is not able to say what you both have made, or will make, of that potential. Some traits will take longer to emerge than others; some may not ever emerge for one reason or another, but not being together for long enough is a common one. Rather like a manual for some kind of complex device, this Profile acquaints you with certain 'parts' and shows you how they work, something that you possibly only recognize when they start to play up or when you are in need of them. Until then, they may not seem to be anything to do with your relationship. Also be aware that no-one position or aspect can make or break a relationship - although some might be quite crucial. At the same time, note that the Sign and House positions of the Ascendant, Sun, Moon and Planets indicate qualities about your relationship that are in most cases 'neutral' in that they do not necessarily show whether it is the positive or negative inclinations that hold sway; it is the Aspects listed beneath the Sign and House positions that indicate this, as well as helping you to deal with or transform the challenging negative ones, and how where a 'demand' hopefully has a 'supply' to meet it. Finally, the overall accuracy of your Relationship Profile depends upon the accuracy of your given Birth Times, particularly with respect to any Aspects to the Ascendant or Midheaven.

1/Ascendant: Your Relationship's Image and Identity

Corporate Image

Capricorn Rising

As a couple you could be said to possess a 'corporate image' in that you come across as anything from a well-groomed status symbol to being just downright dependable. The irony is that, notwithstanding some crossover, these two facets are poles apart - but you should know which belongs to you two! However a quality common to both is that either can make you a slave to that image, with the former insisting that you maintain a polished and controlled veneer at all times, and with the latter obliging you to meet everyone else's demands of your patent and perennial efficiency.

In both cases you have the kind of image that is inherently lasting, although the mask can slip eventually, revealing the all too human emotional truth of who you really are as a couple and as individuals. And this 'unveiling' should be welcomed as it puts you in touch with what is really authentic about you, rather than what you think will pass muster in a conventional sense.

What all this adds up to that every so often you've got to give yourselves and each other permission to let it all hang out emotionally, not be so 'dependable', and let the devil in you both out for run. Ironically again, if you don't deliberately do this, one (or even both) of you is liable to play away for some fun - and then there will possibly be the devil to pay!

With Capricorn Rising the planet that is said to rule your whole chart, meaning it plays a most important role in your whole relationship, is Saturn. So study Chapter 8/Saturn: Commitment and Staying Power within your Relationship, with this in mind.

Celebrated Couple/Jupiter in the Tenth House (See 7/Jupiter: Your Relationship's Belief in Itself)

2/Sun: The Heart and Purpose of your Relationship

Worthy Opponents

Sun in Aries

Your partnership's essential purpose in life is simply to do something that makes you feel independent and effective individuals. This may appear to be contrary to what a relationship is about, that is, being a union of two people. But the dynamic of your relationship forces you to be two independent human beings as much as, if not more than, being a couple.

It is as if it compels you to look at each other in a new way, and it does this to others as well. This could be accomplished either consciously, by one or both of you carrying out a deliberate act in the name of some cause, or unconsciously, by making it hard for each other, or others, to relate to you as you are.

Another common manifestation of this dynamic, that is behind the purpose of your relationship, is competitiveness - again, something that would appear to go against the need for harmony in a relationship. But it is precisely through this competition that you find and develop your core qualities as individuals. As you both fight for attention or being first you should become stronger individuals, because like sparring partners you get to know each other's, and therefore your own, strengths and weaknesses very well.

Sooner or later, or probably from the word go, this can all manifest as a very physical kind of relationship, and one that could have a pioneering streak. You have get-up-and-go as a couple, and like to leap in without too much decision-making or planning. This can be objectionable at times - and indeed your combined childlike impetuosity can repel others - but you must, individually and together, have the freedom to act. You don't want to just think about it and get pent-up in the process. At all costs you need to avoid negative emotions like resentment, regret or self-pity, for they would deny you what is essential to your nature as a couple and as individuals - namely, immediacy and straightforwardness in responding to anything that transpires between you or to you.

You should not be afraid to be forceful in this. If one or both of you is so, then look for negative examples of force in your personal histories that initially compromised your right to assert yourself. This right is like the outpouring of life itself, and nothing should be allowed to get in the way of its innocence and freshness, for this is what enables your relationship, like no other, to be as two children at play. And in turn the relationship enables this very thing.

A Question of Values

Sun in the Second House

All of this is most likely to centre upon what you each regard as being of true value, be that material, aesthetic or sensual. If you share the same values, particularly regarding the value of money itself, then anything that you put your combined energies into will be attained. You could simply translate this into accumulating plenty of money and property, and for as long as you truly regard this as important, then that is what you are both able to do. Indeed, being in successful business together is a strong possibility, all things considered.

But if your respective values are not in accord, then you would be effectively operating on different levels, which simply halves your effectiveness as a couple. And that 'effectiveness' could mean not just relating to something material like buying a house or creating income, or how you decorate your home, but to having a baby or possessing peace of mind in being with one another. There would also be the most obvious sign that you are investing your individual energies in different things: arguing about money or taste. But this too would be missing the point because you are not actually arguing about money or taste itself, but about what you should both spend it on or how you can both get it; or who is earning or contributing what. And even then it might be a case of substituting something like affection for money; like for example, 'you aren't being nice enough to me so I won't part with my hard-earned cash on something you want or need'.

In the end though the issue is: What is our relationship worth? Is it worth sacrificing this or that for? Is it worth working all hours of the day for? Is it worth making compromises or agreeing to differ? Is it worth all the tears and strife?

If the answer is 'yes' then the 'currency' you are using is called LOVE. If the answer is 'no' then it is not.

Your Solar Aspects

Happy Trails

Sun trine Jupiter

There is a positive dimension to your relationship that bestows both wisdom and good luck upon you as long as you cultivate your essentially benign and philanthropic nature as a couple. This quality then attracts funds and opportunities, help just when you need it, and people in foreign parts that are well-disposed towards you.

Well-Ordered

Sun trine Saturn

What serves your relationship well in so many respects is a sense of discipline and practicality, and an awareness of how the status quo works. Whether these are qualities brought to the relationship by one or both of you, or by your merely being together, or by something that is imposed by circumstances, you should be well able to deal with the challenges and difficulties of life. This would apply especially to the material world for you have a sort of self-stabilizing mechanism built into your partnership.

For the same reasons you usually adhere to a formal and conventional life-style, and subscribe to traditional standards - or you would make life easier if you used the system as opposed to bucking it. Paradoxically though, it is this very sense of order that can cause you to miss some vital but radical point concerning your relationship itself, or about each other as individual personalities.

Elevated or Deluded

Sun opposition Neptune

Most significantly though, and as the title of this aspect suggests, your relationship can go one of two ways - or more likely both. This is because you have come together in the name of some ideal that you want to be true to, but it is more than likely that at first you will not be aware of this - you will just be taken up in the tide of emotion like a boat taken out to sea, giving rise to you very likely spending some exquisitely beautiful and pleasurable times together. Along the way you find out just how true you can be to that 'ideal' as the cracks that are practical and everyday reality start to break through. Like leaks in the hull of your 'boat' these can be plugged with more illusions, hoping against hope, or with such higher emotions as compassion, sweet surrender and selfless love. It is very likely that eventually your relationship could become platonic, with or without acceptance - but acceptance would be better as there is a kind of inevitability about such a development once physical love begins to no longer hold water.

Another, and common, expression of this idealism is for one of you to see themselves as the 'saviour' of the other. The other may well be in need of saving, and play the victim to the 'saviour'. Now it may well be the case that this is actually what is happening, but the 'saviour' will really have to be selfless and ready to exercise some 'tough love', while the 'victim' would need to respond positively to such saving rather than carrying on down the slippery slope. But then again, that is precisely what might happen, leaving the 'saviour' to contemplate whether or not their efforts have served any spiritual or practical purpose - or just taught them a valuable lesson. It may well turn out that the 'saviour' was fooling themselves, projecting their own need to be 'rescued' on to the 'victim', who in turn was just taking them for a fool. One could say that a successful saviour/victim relationship is as likely as anyone being spiritually aware enough to play each role honestly enough. The cynic or possibly realist would say that this relationship is doomed to disappointment. The genuine idealist would say that 'everything serves to further', meaning that this relationship has the potential to make one more capable of selfless love, which is love indeed.

Ultimately yours is either a spiritual tie or a misconceived one. Everything depends upon surrendering to the 'line of least resistance' which means to say that there is a way on, through and up - but egotistical and childish desires to have it how one imagines it ought to be would have to be sacrificed or frustrated, sooner or later.

3/Moon: The Soul and Emotional Nature of your Relationship

Security through or versus Independence

Moon in Aries

Your being together creates or emphasizes a need in one or both of you to feel independent or out in front in some way. This could be seen as going against what an equal and sharing relationship is all about for such a need predisposes you to stay as childlike and as unattached as possible. So you want to be in relationship but something kicks against it at the same time, giving rise to tempers being lost and much foot-stamping as it becomes obvious that you can't both easily have your own way at the same time. Others will probably see you as like a couple of children, with feeling charmed or exasperated as the next response, accompanied by cries of 'bless!' or 'hopeless!'

This is all very exciting, but at some point you have to settle for the fact that if wish to have a secure relationship you will both have to make some kind of commitment and compromise. But then again, the urge to be independent could win through, which means that one or both of you finds themselves on their own - the most basic expression of independence - or you agree to disagree, respect each other's individual needs and somehow rub along together, with the occasional and inevitable toys being thrown out of the pram!

Emotional Communication

Moon in the Third House

All these feelings are disposed towards finding expression through the written or spoken word. On the one hand this can mean that you can communicate how you feel to one another with ease and fluency- and you can as a couple convey your feelings to others effectively as well. Quite simply you possess a mental awareness of the feelings of yourselves and others that can be extremely reassuring as it means you are able to identify and clarify emotions, giving rise to relief and realization - not to mention being very stimulating company as well as possibly gifted as a literary duo.

On the other hand though, it is the feelings between the two of you that actually get in the way of communicating. Needs and fears, desires and longings, get in the way of seeing what is really happening. They run away with themselves and before either of you know it is as if you are no longer talking the same language. Subjectivity overwhelms objectivity and mountains are made out of molehills.

Naturally it is possible that you swing between these two extremes, but obviously it would pay to be mindful of your feelings by talking about them themselves, and thereby lean towards the first option more than the second.

Your Lunar Aspects

Charm and Familiarity

Moon sextile Venus

What comes to the rescue in all your emotional interactions is a certain softness that you have between you, and a sentimentality and sensibility that you have in common. Friends and family, and others in general, find it easy to bathe in your pleasingly familiar aura. This talent that you have as a couple for soothing and making people feel good has many uses and can take many positive and endearing forms.

Image versus Emotions

Moon square Ascendant

Your private or emotional life as a couple can run at cross-purposes to the image you happen to present. In other words, much as you try to keep the personal side to yourselves, it can burst or leak out - embarrassingly at times. But this need not be a problem if you have enough depth and sincerity going for you. In fact, any such exposure of how you are on the inside should serve to broaden your understanding of one another and strengthen your relationship in the process. If however such embarrassment has a more damning effect, then your relationship could not said to be that strong in the first place, built on image rather than anything more substantial.

4/Mercury: How you Think and Communicate as a Couple

As One Mind

Mercury in Pisces

As a couple you have a sensitive mentality which absorbs information rather than consciously learning it. By just being together, ideas and solutions seem to surface rather than being actually worked or even talked out or acquired from any external source. You can just let your combined intellects be a kind of nozzle which directs the stream of pictures and words that issue from imaginations that are made the more fertile by your being in relationship.

If however either of you should get the notion that they must be in logical control of thought processes, then they become adept at poking at the blind-spots and irrational ideas of the other because they seem to threaten their own concept of mental order. Or one or both of you can suspect negative thoughts and sleights when there are none, or which are just harmless carping. In any case you need to trust and enjoy this communing of minds that you experience.

Money-Minded

Mercury in the Second House

These combined mental qualities of yours are a major material asset, or a major liability. So it is important to get the best out of them and eliminate their weaknesses. The soundness of your joint mentality greatly determines the state of your finances, income(s), and how you intellectually evaluate your relationship. You may even work together at something to do with money, real estate, accounting, etc. You prefer to concern yourselves with practical issues - or more likely you are forced to by circumstances. It is important that you try to subtract any emotional issues from your strictly material concerns and calculations. After all, one of your assets - or necessities - is being able to put your heads together to work out these very things.

Your Mercury Aspects

Strong Words

Mercury conjunction Mars

Any kind of communication between you never has strong feelings very far away from it. On the plus side, when you are both fighting the same corner you can get your way and make your point with great force and conviction. By the same token, you can also get easily agitated with each other when you are not in agreement, taking issue in quite a fierce way. And yet this does fire you to act and speak out, and thereby get things off your chests and out in the open. All the same, counting to ten when wound up would be a good idea because often what is making one of you angry is something in your head that the other has triggered and not necessarily actually caused. This is important because if this possibility isn't checked you can go off on one and any real communication gets lost in a funk of mental anger that very likely originates in something someone else said or did to you many years ago.

5/Venus: Your Relationship's Appeal and Harmony

Free but not so Easy

Venus in Aquarius

You are endeavouring to introduce a measure of detachment and freedom into your relationship, and into your interactions with society generally. What this means primarily is that you each require the other to be a friend, for when such is the case you are able to look at each other as human beings with individual ways of living rather than as being extensions of, and totally answerable to, each other. However, such a liberal attitude does require an individual moral code that you both live by - as distinct from having no code at all.

Without this code - which is really a sense of commitment to your own principles that overrides emotional game-playing - your relationship can float way on the breeze as free and easiness turns out to be case of hedging your bets. In other words, not being committed to anything.

Appealing Coupling

Venus in the First House

These and other qualities of love and beauty show themselves primarily in your actual physical presence, appearance or manner of expression. As a couple you are either lovely to look at or pleasant to be with, or both. If one or both you are the former, your looks are probably what kicked the relationship off in the first place, or in any event there was a strong pull toward one another from the word go. The downside here is that physical charms, attractive as they are, do have the likelihood of fading with time, or being overemphasized, and possibly turning the heads of those outside of your relationship.

The more enduring side of Venus in the First House is the affection you feel and show for one another. Also, appreciating that it is your differences that complement one another goes a long way to ensuring that your love for one another doesn't become a casualty of those more superficial displays of being in relationship.

You have great appeal as a couple, and so are welcome to many social occasions, and this may be expressed as being artistic together in some way, such as singing or playing music.

Socially Desirable

Venus sextile Moon

Fortunately, you have an instinctive ability to satisfy each other's needs and senses. And this emanates outwards with others finding you an attractive and pleasant couple to be with. As a pair you are also accommodating of others, and expect to be equally welcomed yourselves.

Positively Indulgent

Venus square Jupiter

You really enjoy one another, at least initially. There is a very indulgent streak in your relationship for being together brings out the desire to party, go out on the town, be hedonistic, eat and drink well, and generally have a good time. Obviously the downside to this is hangovers, expanding waistlines, and more seriously, not doing what needs to be done which isn't that much fun. Be that as it may, taking such pleasure in each other's company does make for a generous and expansive attitude that can take difficulties and disagreements in its stride.

Laid Back Love

Venus trine Uranus

A great asset you have as a couple is that you are able to grant each other plenty of space, to have social and even more intimate involvements outside of the two of you. This is of course in proportion, or maybe in opposition, to any more possessive or insecure elements in your relationship or individual personalities. The point is that your being together allows, or possibly forces, you to give each other plenty of latitude. At the very least it is worth experimenting with ways of being in relationship that are outside of the norm for you could both be then pleasantly surprised how it can remove pressures that are there simply because one or both of you is trying to fit the relationship into a mould it doesn't belong in. As a cherry on this cake, others do or would find you stimulating company, possibly in an innovative or artistic way.

6/Mars: Your Relationship's Drive and Sexuality

Subtle Sexuality

Mars in Pisces

As a couple you assert yourselves and get what you want by subtle or indirect means. This can be likened to the angler who baits and casts his or her line, and then sits in wait, accepting what life's current will bring. Strong emotional undercurrents are influencing your actions towards one another though, and toward others, so you need to be honest with each other, and therefore clear, about what your desires actually are if you wish to avoid resentments, regrets and awkward situations building up as a result of being too circumspect, or putting out confusing messages, particularly of a sexual kind.

The reason behind all this is that you are both very sensitive to being spurned - and especially sexually. Bearing in mind that you both put out a subtle emanation that yourselves and others sort of hypnotically respond to, would keep you both in touch with the fact that you'll get equally subtle responses back from them and each other. You get under one another's and other people's skins, rather than bluntly proposition. You like to of dance, rather than wrestle, with one another or the people around you.

What all this can amount to is a need to fine-tune your sexual vibrations as they can get very confusing unless you eventually subscribe to some kind of discipline, like tantra, or abstinence with a view to seeing your sexuality more clearly. However, such are the subtleties of your combined sexuality - not to mention how that affects your individual sexual inclinations - the permutations of your sexual expression are almost endless.

A Drive to Profit

Mars in the Second House

You should find that asserting yourselves has to, or likes to, express itself most of all in the pursuit of increasing your self-worth as individuals and obtaining a financial income that matches that self-worth. Looked at in another way, your financial state reflects not so much the value you both place upon your relationship, but upon the energy that you are both prepared to put into improving it.

If you simply desire to have plenty of money and are not too fussed about how you go about it, then money is what you'll get. But then how much money you have or do not have should best not be regarded as a measure of your relationship worth and effectiveness. Making money might give one or both of you a sexual buzz, but by the same token finding yourself without would then shoot your passion down in flames. Likewise, being in competition to make money can be a good way of getting you both up and about the business of material acquisition, but be careful that such competition does not turn in to outright hostility born of a sense of superiority or inferiority.

Your Mars Aspects

Strung Taut

Mars conjunction Mercury

Together you are in possession of a lot of mental or nervous energy. You can both push on with mental tasks and achieve objectives while other couples have to take a rest. Useful though your cerebral muscle is, you too should drop everything at regular intervals and let the world run itself for a while. Otherwise you can get so wound up as to scotch all your best intentions through nervous exhaustion or through jumping down each other's throats. Temper your energetic minds by cultivating some docility. Incidentally though, much of this depends on any other aspects to Mars.

A Turn-on that Can't be Turned Off

Mars square Uranus

Whenever the desires of either of you are opposed by the other, they react quite hotly, even violently or recklessly. Just by being together, a very strong sense of fighting for individual rights is aroused. At first however, this dynamic is very likely experienced as sexual excitement, possibly because it involves something provocative, new or out of the ordinary. There may even be an element of danger or risk present. And you could be wild or experimental as you seek the truth of what sex is all about.

The trouble is that much as your being together kind of flips on a switch somewhere, releasing a stimulating and innovative current, it cannot just be turned off. In other words, your relationship has to constantly update itself, which means that settling into a rut, denying one's sexuality, or limiting each other's movements just attracts disruption and disturbance. Ultimately you are being forced into an awareness of what your respective energies or desires - sexual and otherwise - are actually all about. Whether they can co-exist is another question, the answer to which is very possibly detectable in the rest of this Profile.

Clear Cut Couple

Mars sextile Ascendant

The way in which you assert yourselves as a couple comes across as natural - whether you are aware of this or not. It is best that you are aware of this however, because others readily respond to two people who appear to be natural leaders and operate as a unit, even if this is not quite what you both feel it to be privately.

7/Jupiter: Your Relationship's Belief in Itself

Buried Gold

Jupiter in Scorpio

Your faith in your relationship is discovered in crisis situations, be that between the two of you, or managing some kind of demanding situation concerning others. Whether you know it or not, your joint philosophy is of the "no gain without pain" variety -and that can apply to both your material and emotional life together. To be more precise though, it is more a case of "no gain without loss - of what you no longer need".

Conversely, if as a couple you attempt to have a safe, predictable and 'normal' relationship, then you will be inviting a sense of meaninglessness or lack of depth, something which in turn will attract some form of crisis that will prove to you whether or not your relationship is worth believing in or not. All this springs from somewhere deep, dark and mysterious in your combined psyche. So the dark side of your relationship is where the gold, your faith in you both as a united entity, lies buried, and you'll need to go through hell and high water to knock off the soppy or wobbly bits that inhibit or compromise the discovery of that "gold".

Celebrated Couple

Jupiter in the Tenth House

It is very likely that you will become well known for the qualities of faith and enterprise described in your Jupiter Profile, as well as for other talents you possess as a couple described elsewhere. In fact, it is in your coming together that your fortunes in the outer world, individually and together, are furthered, possibly concerning law, drama, teaching, religion or publishing. Indeed, as a couple you may well come to be regarded as a successful relationship, a kind of gold standard amongst your peers. The downside to this can be that you seek to attain or maintain such status too avidly, or assume moral high ground without actually seeing to it that you are actually living up to your public image. Such would actually attract an eventual fall from grace. But one way or the other your relationship does have prominence; it's up to you both as to what that prominence is for.

Your Jupiter Aspects

Good Standing

Jupiter trine Sun

By and large, you fall into the positive category with respect to your faith and development, along with the standing and good fortune that such attracts. Your beliefs and moral standards are the mainstay of your integrity and cultural awareness as a couple, and others can learn much from them.

The Road of Excess

Jupiter square Venus

All of this seeking of faith and growth is aided and sabotaged by the best and the worst qualities of your way of relating to one another. This can translate into your being so hedonistic and extravagant that you squander away your energies and resources and have nothing to ultimately show for them. On the other hand you could be a testament to the statement of visionary William Blake's that "the road of excess leads to the palace of wisdom". But this would only hold true if it was understood what this actually means. True joy and wellbeing is found through judiciously bestowing genuinely bountiful affections and heartfelt gifts upon each other and those in your sphere, rather than thinking that quantity could ever be a substitute for quality.

A Sense of Balance

Jupiter trine Saturn

Whatever opinions or visions you share, your combined attitude also makes you aware that they must be in some way applicable to the material situation in hand. Such considerations do slow down your mental flights or realization of your plans somewhat, but you both move ahead effectively on a broad front rather than being merely meteoric. In the process, you also develop a reliable set of moral values which serve as a strong stabilizing influence in your relationship. Your efforts as a couple breed lasting results.

8/Saturn: Commitment and Staying Power within your Relationship

Hard Pride or Dignified

Saturn in Leo

Staying power for you two is built on helping each other to develop self-confidence, to maintain a healthy sense of ego without either one of you becoming too full of themselves or too much in need of admiration, and to generally be generous toward one another on all levels as much as possible. As time goes by, this means that you should both gradually and eventually acquire a well-modulated expression of your talents and specialness, as a couple and as individuals, along with the ability to accept constructive criticism from each other and from others in how they view you as a couple.

After the initial mutual admiration society that your coupling can give rise to, the need to do all of the above may manifest as one or both of you feeling or complaining that they are not getting enough attention, or one of you appearing to take on a superior position in the relationship. Whereas before you felt very special as a couple, cracks can begin to appear that are possibly only obvious to one of you, but quite likely plain to see for an outsider.

Yours can be a 'pride comes before a fall' kind of relationship unless you keep each other aware, in a respectful fashion, that there are 'warts' in evidence. In other words, you last together when like the 'royal couple' that you are, you are able to behave in a dignified way, which when the chips are down means being able to spot or accept when either of you are being too 'regal' or feeling so 'special' that they start feeling immune to being merely a fallible human being. If you can both get past what essentially is an ego problem on each of your parts, where you are each trying to live up to some impossible standard of 'brilliance' - or expecting the other to do so - then your relationship will go up a level in the staying power stakes. But if either one of you cannot get out of your own way, then it'll go down a level in the staying power stakes.

A Binding Relationship

Saturn in the Seventh House

There is something about your being together that won't let you part or find an easy way out. This may sound like a negative, but essentially this means that you are simply learning to relate to each other in a responsible way, and you find that circumstances are such that they enforce this condition, through thick and thin. Whether you are actually married or not, you both feel that there is some kind of binding contract between you. The more you each honour this written or unwritten commitment then the more your relationship becomes a testament to the power of commitment itself.

Quite what it is about your relationship that gives you both pleasure and meaning would need to be supplied by other elements of your being involved, as described elsewhere in this Profile. It is as if this position imposes the 'skeleton' or basic structure to your relationship, and it is up to each of you as to what supplies the 'flesh' of love and kindness, of warmth and mutual emotional concern. This is what makes the difference between your having a lasting relationship in name only or one that genuinely deserves and merits the description.

To sum up, failing to commit yourselves leads to feeling lonely or being alone, and love for both of you is very much where you find it and how you make it. But be sure that that "flesh" is present; otherwise it would be a case of all duty and no love.

Your Saturn Aspects

The Favour of Authority

Saturn trine Sun

Because at least one of you has a natural and increasingly conscious sense of discipline, you work through all these issues assiduously, and at a steady pace. Circumstances also seem to confer stability, possibly from people in authority. As long as neither of you is compromised or offended by having to play by their rules, then a firm and established path is set out before you both.

Persevering with Joy

Saturn trine Jupiter

Fortunately, you are both inclined accept any difficulties and challenges philosophically, and see the ultimate advantage in learning your lessons and accepting your joint and individual responsibilities. This may be done a bit grudgingly at first, but as time goes by you both come to positively enjoy it. Eventually, you earn the virtues of patience and of performing duties happily.

9/Uranus: Freedom and Awakening within your Relationship

New Thought

Uranus in Gemini

Your relationship may invite or force you to reconsider or even challenge attitudes towards thinking patterns, and the use of the written and spoken word, or to implement social change through the use of the written and spoken word. Your being together also aims to bring the fruits of science, technology and metaphysics into the everyday sphere of human activity.

The Urge for Freedom of Expression

Uranus in the Fifth House

Your need for change and awakening makes itself felt in your manner of sexual or creative expression. Typically, this means that you allow, or need to allow, each other plenty of freedom to be themselves with other people. If either of you cramps the other's style by being too possessive or clingy in company then they should expect their partner to up the ante in terms of doing what they want to do in a more reckless fashion. The obvious extreme here is simply one or even both of you having a fling or affair - more as a statement of their innate need for freedom than anything else, and as their reaction to having it suppressed or censored.

Conversely, if the new and exciting, the unexpected and experimental, is sought out and experienced by you both together, especially in the sexual area, then this effectively provides that sense of freedom and awakening rather than feeling that the romance or thrill has gone out of your relationship.

There is also the possibility that your relationship is in itself an affair, and it is the excitement of it being just that which is so stimulating. However, for the same reason you would probably find that making it into a 'relationship proper' would take away that thrill or simply subject you to what the above has just described.

This urge on one or both of your parts to freely express yourselves can be embodied in any children you have, for they would be unusual, disruptive or gifted in some way - and possibly very unexpected!

Your Uranus Aspects

Unusual Lifestyle

Uranus trine Venus

Because the combination of your personalities is genuinely attracted by the call to freedom, innovation and experimentation where interpersonal relationships are concerned, you automatically attract others who are drawn to these social dimensions and practices as well. Consequently your lifestyle as a couple is likely to be or become unusual and stimulating, unconventional and probably artistic too.

Freedom and Desire

Uranus square Mars

Your sex life - or the lack of it - becomes a particularly vibrant area for waking you up to what you both need to know about life, relating and yourselves as individuals, as too does breaking the rules or conditions that have been imposed upon you personally or as a couple. You find that you have to cut each other quite a lot of slack, otherwise you find you are interminably getting each other's way as desires and needs for freedom run at cross purposes. But really this is all in aid of waking you up to what it really means to be free to do your own thing - together or apart.

10/Neptune: Sensitivity and Spirituality within your Relationship

A Cultural Need for Ideal Relationship

Neptune in Libra

As in many others, in your relationship the whole realm of love and marriage is influenced by our culture to be more idealistic and sensitive, with confusion and soaring divorce rates being a common effect of this. Art and music are also vehicles through which you can express yourselves as a couple. The House position and Aspects of Neptune in your Relationship chart, as given below, will indicate how your own relationship is uplifted or undermined by this influence.

Mystical or Mistaken Beliefs

Neptune in the Ninth House

For you two, sensitivity and spirituality manifest in a search for some belief or higher meaning to life that you can both agree upon and share an enthusiasm for. However this is likely to first manifest as a strongly idealistic idea of the relationship and each other, so it is unconsciously assumed that you are both on the same spiritual or moral wavelength when you are not necessarily. And so after a while you begin to find out through it becoming apparent that you are either reading from the same page of the hymn book, or that you are not.

Commonly it'll be one of you that has a more active and avid belief in something spiritual, and they will then try to 'convert' the other to that belief. The other might go along with it just to keep their partner 'sweet' especially when in the initial glow of romance or lust. You may actually go on some exotic journey together that kind of cements the idea that you are travelling together in more ways than one.

If this 'crossed lines' effect is left to its own devices it can sow seeds of discontent and disillusionment as it becomes evident that one person's zeal is the other's poison. However, if you've both consciously agreed that you are following the same star, which probably means sharing a mystical view of life, then you will go from strength to strength as your hearts and minds continue to entwine.

Your Neptune Aspects

Spiritually Aware or Bust

Neptune opposition Sun

These issues of sensitivity and spirituality are of central importance to your relationship. Without understanding this and the implications of your having to be considerably more attuned to higher or finer emotional vibrations and values than most other couples, you are liable to get increasingly lost and confused, and be fools to yourselves. The most important turning point occurs when you both realize that all you long for or fear is really inside each of you as individuals and not in the other person.

Neo-Spiritual Culture

Neptune sextile Pluto

Such is the state of our cultural environment, issues concerning sensitivity and spirituality can now be addressed through seeking out the practitioners, groups or literature that are now widely available.

11/Pluto: Influence and Transformation within your Relationship

Empowering Self-Expression

Pluto in Leo

As for many others, this generational influence urges you to express yourselves as individuals because or in spite of the fact that you are in relationship with one another. As with every issue involved in relating, a balance has to be found. In this case, between doing it the 'my way' of one of you while at the same time considering and deferring to the 'my way' of the other. This may sometimes have to be thrashed out quite heatedly, but as long good heart and humour is maintained it'll be all for the better as it makes for you both not only being stronger individuals, but also having a relationship to match.

Transformation or Domination

Pluto in the Seventh House

Your relationship has a profoundly transformative effect upon both of you. Essentially this has to be for the better, but a great deal depends upon how each of you as individuals respond to this influence itself. Ideally, you both need to recognize the changes, initial and ongoing, that need to be made in both of you in order to make your relationship rewarding and viable - and ultimately a deep, powerful and lasting union.

Such changes may be the necessary responses to events and challenges that occur to you, individually or as a couple. But if one of you thinks that it is just about the other making changes - with them being the one who dictates what those changes are - then the relationship will end when the other person has had enough and leaves, makes a counter power play, or, it will just grind on with one of you in the dominator role and the other in the dominated role.

Your Pluto Aspects

The Power of Compassion

Pluto sextile Neptune

Fortunately, any of the more difficult and intense pressures that Pluto can burden your relationship with may be alleviated by consciously exercising compassion towards one another. This is further helped by the culture you both now live in being alive to the presence of these difficulties, should there be any, and what steps can be taken to sort them out.

Postscript

It is truly hoped that this interpretation of your Relationship Chart has been helpful, enlightening and encouraging. Human relating is possibly the greatest art of life, and to help you become better versed in it the following reports are also recommended:

Successful Relationship 1- The Individual: How to Attract a Mate and Relate. This shows your personal strengths and weaknesses as a partner or potential partner. It helps enable you to literally attract or keep a mate by showing you how to optimize your personality.

Successful Relationship 2- The Interaction: The Chemistry Between You. This describes how two people actually experience one another on a number of levels. The 'hot' and the 'cold' areas; the irresistible attractions and the unfortunate differences. It also shows you how to negotiate those difficult areas and maximize those positive ones.
